Dear [Redacted]

In a discussion with Colonel Wesley T. Guest, Chief of the Army Communications Service, recently he stated they had encountered some difficulty in getting our Wire Center in London to relay messages for them. He said that our office had never refused to relay a message, but had in some instances done so very reluctantly.

I have written you on another occasion or two concerning the necessity of maintaining cordial relations with the Army Communications Service, and I ask again that you give this matter your personal attention.

Sincerely,

L. K. White
